Fed-State tussling over raw milk, which will hopefully end once the fallout over Chevron lands directly on FDA's Rockville office with a bang.

3 years after the Chevron legal doctrine came into play, in 1987, FDA started its 4 decade war on raw milk, banning the sale of raw milk for humans across state lines. Luckily, it cannot ban intrastate sales, though it desperately wants to. With Chevron gone, the FDA may be prohibited from banning interstate sales as well, if challenged in court.

“There are no plans to conduct surveillance of raw milk for H5N1 and there are no plans for restrictions on raw milk sales due to the outbreak,” Derek Grant, a spokesperson for the Wyoming Department of Agriculture, said to CBS News in a statement.

Wyoming and Iowa both have laws that significantly limit state oversight of products like raw milk to “informed end consumers” in the state.

“Because of this, foods sold under the Wyoming Food Freedom Act are not licensed or regulated by the WDA so there is no structure in place to conduct surveillance or place restrictions on sales,” Grant said.

With Bird Flu a Threat, FDA Asks Some States to Curb Sales of Raw Milk

By HealthDay | June 7, 2024 |

By Robin Foster, Health Day Reporter

FRIDAY, June 7, 2024 (HealthDay News) — The U.S. Food and Drug Administration on Thursday asked states to work harder to protect the public from the risks of raw milk as a bird flu outbreak continues to spread among dairy cows.

In an open letter to state and local officials, the agency urged more testing of herds that produce raw milk for sale and recommended that states use their regulatory powers to stop the sale of raw milk where dairy herds have tested positive.

On Thursday, Minnesota became the 10th state to report an infected herd. According to the U.S. Department of Agriculture, 82 U.S. herds have now tested positive for the H5N1 avian virus.

The FDA doesn't allow the sale of raw milk across state lines, but several states allow the sale of raw milk within their borders, with varying requirements, the agency noted.

Raw milk can carry high levels of the H5N1 bird flu virus because it appears to infect cows through their udders. While it isn't yet clear whether people can get bird flu by drinking contaminated milk, cats living on farms with infected cows have died after consuming raw milk and three dairy workers exposed to it have been infected. [And that is the very best “evidence” they have that raw milk is a problem after 3 months of intensively trying to prove there is a problem. Then it must be safe—Nass]

“Given the current and potential future risks that HPAI H5N1 virus poses to our nation's public health, as well as the health of our nation's food-producing animals and wildlife, it is important to work together to minimize the additional exposure of humans and other animal species,” Dr. Don Prater, who is leading the FDA's H5N1 response, told CNN.

Along with stronger warnings about the dangers of raw milk, the FDA is recommending that any raw milk or raw milk products from exposed cattle that are fed to calves or any other animals be heat-treated or pasteurized, the FDA said.

The agency added that it would soon share new research and data on both bird flu virus in raw milk and raw milk products.

[Well here is the FDA web page with the updates and as of yesterday June 28, they say new testing reveals pasteurized milk is fine, and FDA says NOTHING about raw milk. Here is what the FDA says instead:—Nass

One Response to “Bird flu used to target human nutrition”

Yes Tap, its all about removing access to good nutritious food . The pasteurisation of milk is more a threat to health because of the removal bacteria necessary for gut function. They have to remove our independent food supplies, in order to bring in their digital currency, because if we have our own food they know we can survive outside of their fiat money system!
